Description: Sarah Lincoln's Woods consists of 3 different community types: xeric (dry) upland forest, mesic (moist) upland forest, and dry-mesic upland forest. The mesic upland forest consists of red and white oak, white ash, and some sugar maple. The dry-mesic upland forest area is composed of red, white, and black oaks, shagbark and pignut hickories, and white ash. Both of these forest areas are populated with young to mature second-growth trees. The dry and xeric upland forest is dominated by post, blackjack and black oaks, and also includes some scarlet and white oaks, and pignut hickory. This section of the forest retains much of its presettlement character.
